An Estate of $2,641,523

Miss Mary M. Roberts, daughter of the late Marshall O. Roberts, steamship and mine owner, who died January 1 last, left an estate of $2,641,523.

An accounting of the Farmers' Loan and Trust Company, filed in the Surrogates' Court for judicial sett ement, shows that securities have been set aside to meet the numerous charitable bequests made in the will of Miss Roberts, some of which amount to about $203,000, the largest public bequest being $406,000 to the Young Men's Christian Association, Miss Roberts owned $504,000 worth of Liberty bonds.

That Miss Kathvyn Lee, the seprane who gave a recital last night at Carnegie Hall, is a very handsome and statuesque young woman, there can be no shred of doubt, but why in the present state of her vocal education she should essay a song recital is one of those mysteries the key to which we search for in vain.

It is enough to state that she was listened to by an audience of excellent size and that she sang a large variety of songs which ran from Puccini's "O Mio Bambino Caro" to a group by Ethelbert Nevin.

One would almost expect Bryant
Washburn to come out with "If it isn't a Washburn it isn't a comedy," or something like that, after seeing "It Pays to Advertise" at the Riaito. Of ourse, there are other comedians, but Washburn is a little different, and ever since we saw him do "Skinner's Dress Suit" we knew that we never should live of him.

His new nicture is the Corbins and the Pomeroys were deadly enemies, like Romeo Montague and Juliet Capulet. Ruth 'hought that he married her because ae loved her. But he distillusioned her immediately. Hewever, she decided to outwit him. So she waited until a dreadful thunderstorm broke (and as he had been struck by lightning when a child he always temporarily loses his mind in a thunderstorm), and then she went and made love to him.

The next morning he went away for in the corbins and the promeroys were deadly enemies, like Romeo Montague and Juliet Capulet. Ruth 'hought that he married her because ae loved her.
